Mutual Benefit

Campus and community are intertwined editor ["Student Disconnect," 5/31], so here it is.

I'm sorry that you feel deeply disconnected from Eugene's government. We're here to serve you and every other member of our ear Aiden R. Smith: You asked me for a response to your letter to the

While you live here, this is your city and we value you as part of our community. As you know, there are approximately 25,000 students who live, study, work and volunteer here. We benefit every day in terms of our local economy, the many cultural opportunities the UO provides, and from the amazing contributions students make to our community in sharing their skills and talents. I often say that I would never think of talking about Eugene without talking about the UO and I invite those of you who attend the UO to thoroughly participate in our city.

Just a week ago I was on campus reviewing some student proposals for a local indoor/outdoor farmers market. These proposals broaden our thinking and contribute to our local planning efforts. They matter a great deal. Last week at the First Friday Art Walk, student art was on display for our community to enjoy. This past weekend's track and field events filled our community with activity. And, in our Regional Prosperity Plan, the spin-off businesses from student research have a key role in ensuring a more successful future for our community. Your impact is large and important to us.

I'd be the first to admit, there are always town and gown conflicts here as in every university community. We work at this consistently and contribute to the broad discussion in the International Town and Gown Association.

Personally I take every opportunity to recognize and appreciate students for the role they have in community. That's why I'm on campus every month talking to classes and attending events.

Former President Richard Lariviere and I introduced the annual community welcome and asked ASUO presidents to join us in walking door to door to welcome and thank students and to encourage them to be good neighbors and active in their neighborhood associations. As a community we struggle to provide for student housing needs and maintain our beautiful older, close-to-campus neighborhoods. We'd welcome your help with this.

The university has created a Communiversity Assistants program and the city facilitates a neighborhood livability work group, which includes student leaders, and meets once a month to address quality of life and relationship issues near campus. These do include the challenge of how student parties (and after-party behavior) affect the people who live and raise their families around them.

Eugene Police Department has built a comprehensive education campaign to help students avoid being victims of property crimes, especially during school breaks when students are gone. The crime reduction has been substantial.

I think investigation would find that the neighborhood and university spend a great deal of time considering parking issues. It's not easy. There are many needs that must be balanced. To that end the city is doing its utmost to increase options that work, whether that's pedestrian, transit, bike or car.

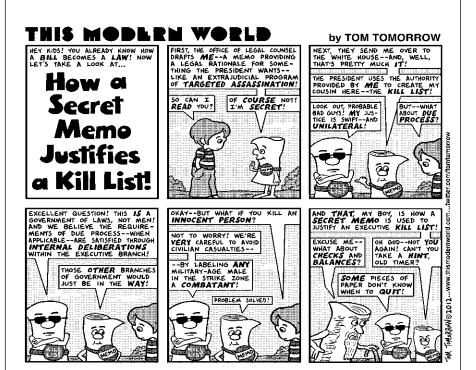

The city encourages students to participate on city boards and commissions and we take pride in having students or former students currently serving on both the police and planning commissions. If you have concerns/observations, please know that you can contact your city councilor, speak at the community forum part of our council meeting, or speak directly to boards and commissions. We welcome your input and participation.

We've had students come to our City Council meetings to discuss options for skateboarder use of bike paths, and we've had students directly influence city rental policies. We've had students speak out for social, environmental and economic justice and equity. These voices are valuable and their activism an important part of our city.

Finally, we know our economy is tough and we're all working on it. We'd love to have more students stay in this community and that means there must be jobs. UO, LCC, the Chamber of Commerce, Eugene, Springfield, Lane County, Metro Partnership, the Workforce Partnership, the hospitals and schools are all working together to foster entrepreneurship, bring in more investment, offer loans, one-stop online business help, incubator space, training, research and cluster development. Our hope is not only more jobs, but also jobs with good wages and in keeping with our community values.

This is just a small part of the picture. I encourage and invite you to become involved and I wish you well with your studies. Don't hesitate to contact me at Kitty.Piercy@ci.eugene.or.us

Kitty Piercy has been mayor of Eugene since 2005 and served in the Oregon House for three terms in the 1990s.

A LOT OF TURNIPS

A column written by Paul Conte in the May 24 EW expressed concern about the Eugene City Council and professional staff in the way they worked with the proposed Capstone student housing project.

Here is some information that may be helpful: The project was first introduced to the Downtown Neighborhood Association (DNA) Jan. 25. There was a community forum sponsored by DNA and City Club of Eugene March 11 and an open house sponsored by the city March 13. There were numerous meetings with Steve Master and Capstone staff by members of the DNA Steering Committee. Master and Capstone's Conrad Sick were directly involved in discussions with residents of Olive Plaza.

City staff was generous with their time as was Mayor Kitty Piercy and Councilor George Brown. I assume that other members of the public were afforded equal opportunity to give input if they asked for it

All of this took place between Jan. 25 and May 13 when the council approved the project. I believe that public inclusion was welcomed, heard, and respected; I don't think anyone was shortchanged in the process.

Another issue raised is the profit that Capstone stands to make on this project. In today's economy, 9 percent is certainly a healthy profit. But that's a red herring. Consider this: The city is investing $8.8 million in tax exemptions. The Capstone project is bringing $89 million in new money to Eugene in the form of jobs and taxes (people with jobs pay taxes!). That's a lot of turnips. This looks like win-win to me

The DNA Steering Committee voted 6-1 to support the proposal, with reservations. The City Council voted 6-2 in favor of the project. We share responsibility for ensuring as best we can that the project is successful for everyone and that agreements are kept.

Sure, there are disagreements, but the City Council and staff, along with many community members, have worked hard to get the best possible deal for Eugene, and I think they've done an admirable job. It's time to turn off the negativity and move forward.

THREESOME IN EUGENE

It's amazing how often I'm reminded of the joys of calling Eugene my home. This morning was another one of those special times

With the sun already up, I fling the golf clubs over the shoulder and embarked on the short walk up to Laurelwood Golf Course (the city's only and finest golf course). Arriving well before its 8 am opening, my two companions teed off behind the greenskeepers already atop their mowers. No worries, we'll square away at the pro shop when we turn the corner. What a gem of a view of the south hills and the northeast flank of Spencer Butte hold as we descend the #1 fairway. Despite the quiet we're not alone this morning: The cart paths are dotted with dog walkers, a jogger or two and the robins hunting for wayward worms.

Now mind you this is not the Laurelweed of old. Steady course improvements over the years have enhanced the drainage features of the old dairy bottomlands, and absent are the fairway white daisies camouflaging your golf ball. Not lost however, is the dawn charm of this precious park valley with its majestic tall firs, rolling hills and the huge statuesque oak (once a twin) midway through hole #7.

Hackers we are, but skilled enough to know what a treasure we have nestled in our own backyard. Or perhaps it was the two pars and a bogey on #9 that helped emphasize this point? Either way, thank you soooo much, south Eugene.

NO METER, PLEASE

Dear EWEB: Please don't put a smart meter on my house. I already pay for the electricity with my money. Do I have to pay with my health, too?

When I first heard about EWEB's plan to install wireless smart meters on nearly every house in Eugene I wondered, what's in it for the people of Eugene? So far, I've found only one answer: People will be able to watch second-by-second fluctuations on their meter and adjust their energy usage accordingly. EWEB is promoting smart meters as a green technology that will benefit everyone. But if there's any truth to that claim, shouldn't we see clear evidence in places already outfitted with smart meters?

So far, the millions of smart meters installed in California by PG&E have yielded no environmental benefit. PG&E admitted in their own audit report that "no energy savings could be demonstrated." In addition, people living in smart-meter equipped houses are reporting health problems including sleep disturbance, headaches, ringing in the ears, heart palpitations and trouble concentrating. Bees, plants and pets may be just as vulnerable to the around-the-clock pulses of radio frequency radiation.

As more people become aware of this infant technology, more light is shed on the health risks. Smart meters deliver full-body radiation at levels 100 times greater than that of a cell phone. And there's no off button.

For these reasons, I repeat my plea to EWEB. Please do not put a smart meter on my house, or on the house of anyone you care about!

Brian Bender Eugene

THINK ABOUT IT

I agree with the stance that the health hazards smart meters present have not been adequately reviewed (see Slant last week). Another issue that no one mentions is the fact that this technology is one that is rapidly changing. Who has the same computer or cell phone they were using 20 years ago? Think about it. Even the cell phones go out of date more rapidly than computers do!

These smart meters should be way outdated before they will be paid for! And who will EWEB be asking to pay for the upgrades as they become necessary?

SLAVERY CHOCOLATE

First Alternative Cooperative in Corvallis is holding its annual voting. If you're a co-op member, please participate. Ballots will be available at either store if you don't receive a ballot in the mail by late May. Ballots are due by June 15.

This year the ballot includes an important referendum to set explicit standards for the products containing chocolate that are sold at our store. The reason is the serious problem with child and adult slavery on cacao plantations on Africa's West Coast.

Former co-op board members, local leaders in the sustainability movement, respected local educators and social justice advocates signed the petition that initiated the slavery chocolate referendum. The passage of this referendum will further

WHERE WE DIED FROM

Really, this is embarrassing. Worse than a get-a-life quest, it was a ghoulish waste of time. It started with a harmless musing. When we moved to Eugene in the '70s, our next-door neighbors were an elderly couple originally from North Dakota. And it turned out that most in their circle of friends were from North Dakota too.

One day (here's the ghoulish part), I was looking through The Register-Guard's obituaries and noticed a lot of those who had passed on were from the Dakotas. My hypothesis: A lot of folks in their 80s living in Eugene came here from North and South Dakota. How many? Well, why not keep track from the obituaries? (Why not? Actually, everyone who knew I was doing it had reasons why not!)

Ignoring their sage advice, from March to August of last year, I tallied the birth state for each person listed. And though I did find out about the Dakotas (N.D. had the 16th most at 1.5 percent and S.D. the 22nd at 1 percent), gradually the quest morphed into a morbid contest to see what state would show up last.

Only 210 out of 667 (31 percent) came from Oregon. Most who died way too young were Oregonians but a surprising number in their 80s to 100s were, too.

California (10 percent) and Washington (5 percent) came next, followed by Illinois (3 percent). Alaska had two obits, Hawaii one, Nevada one,, Wyoming three and Utah three.

After six months I quit tallying but I did keep looking for the three states that still had no obits. Kentucky came pretty quickly but Vermont held out for four more months. Finally, 15 months after the start, the last state appeared. Ironically, it turned out to be the state with the license plate motto:

"The First State" — it was the first of the 13 colonies to ratify the Constitution.

So, I suppose that if you moved to the area from Delaware, you could feel like this highly scientific survey could mean that of the next 1,500 or so people you see, you'll be the last to go. On the other hand, you really ought to find something else to think about. Most likely you'll want to get a life.

SLOW DOWN!

Last week I had occasion to visit friends who live in the 200 block of South 67th Street in Thurston. I was shocked at the speed most people drive from the top to the stop sign. My friend told me this goes on all of the time — I stood there in total amazement. This is a residential area, folks. Kids and dogs and cats are out and about. Summer is coming soon and more kids will be out on skateboards, bicycles, running out in traffic chasing balls, etc. Let's slow down and enjoy. Please.

BUCKETS OF DESTRUCTION

I recently learned KFC is using throw-away paper packaging made from rainforest trees. There is no excuse to trash rainforests, including forests critical to endangered tigers, for chicken buckets.

KFC and Yum! have no sustainability policies to exclude products connected to rainforest destruction, and the company has failed to even answer questions about its sourcing of products such as palm oil, soy and paper products.

Yum! Brands, and the suppliers it buys from, are linked to the destruction of Indonesia's rainforests through Asia Pulp & Paper. According to its own public statements, APP continues to use trees from the rainforests of Indonesia to make paper products. This has to change.

KFC needs to clean up its supply chain and stop pushing endangered wildlife like the Sumatran tigers to the brink of extinction for throw-away, fast-food packaging.

Empty Nest

City Hall's fir coat has gone out of style

ity Hall, I too dislike it – in its present state of disrepair. It depresses with neglect. And sad to say that what it represents, a 1960s version of small city government, just isn't valid anymore. This early-Modernist, idealized square-doughnut of city's services – fire, police, courts, administration, planning, and public meetings – all wrapped around a central courtyard – has run out of steam in more ways than one.

Eugene has grown and with it the need to have more adequate homes and unique buildings for its fire and police departments, which have now moved out. Both architecturally and functionally this can be a good thing. Each new public building, like the Hult Center, the Eugene Public Library, the police station and the new LCC complex, provides an opportunity for a vital city to reshuffle its service ensemble and refresh its public face. But what to do with the emptying nest that's left behind?

From the outside today City Hall exemplifies early-Modernism at its most boring, featuring stacked block concrete walls and block long facades of heavy wood screening derogatorily referred to as its "fir coat." I remember wondering what poor souls the long horizontal building housed when I first drove along 8th Avenue in 1970 and being disappointed that it was Eugene City Hall. Even when relatively new, the opaque wood screen looked more disproportionately mechanical than elegant, more committed to some runaway idea of unity or fealty than responding to soul and sun.

Buildings of this period, however, won prizes for being excessively conceptual and unrelievedly rational as City Hall is here with its one-stop-shopping "big concept" congruent with its circle-in-a-square geometry. Elevating the building on pilotis to provide structured parking underneath unfortunately also created an island out of City Hall, disconnecting all four sides from the bustle of city life.

Perhaps the most successful element of the design remains the circular council chambers at the center of the garden keep. This public room still offers a democratic setting that works quite well.

Other public meeting rooms like the McNutt Room have been too small and awkward for too long a time. Waiting outside under the conceptually unifying breezeway during cold weather months is a good example of how a "big idea" doesn't necessarily keep one warm. Springfield's remodeled shopping center City Hall has for many years been a much friendlier and more comfortable place to meet.

Luckily for us, fir coats have gone out of style. Modernism has regained considerable warmth and moved on if not completely come in from the cold. Steam heating is no more. Fire and police have their own homes, making earthquake upgrading easier and more affordable. County and federal offices remain close by. Much good experience has been gained at overlaying whole new lives on such older buildings as Centre Court, the Smeed Hotel and the Granary to name just a few. And of course, recycling and reusing isn't just greener and more virtuous, it's also cheaper! So, BRING it on.

WWW.EUGENEWEEKLY.COM

Why the reluctance to consider rehabilitating

City Hall? One reason is that we don't always recognize Modern as being historical because we've been immersed in our time's signature stylistic home. Stylistic eras tend to become clearer, however, when they're being left behind. Another is the way that the early Modern, with its intellectual emphasis on simple horizontal lines and machine-like efficiency, tended to eschew a humanity of form, detail, craftsmanship, and artistic finishes that made older buildings emotionally accessible and therefore harder to let go.

But there are armatures of opportunity that grow out of City Hall's very modernity. The simplicity and regularity of the underlying structural frame makes it all that much easier for the existing building to be economically undressed, reconfigured and remodeled.

A recent study by Poticha Architects shows how that process might accomplish some key community objectives. It demonstrates, for example, how the building might be opened up and connected with a plaza to 8th Avenue and Pearl Street; how the council chambers could be made more visible and symbolically important to the community; and ways that additional useful, and perhaps revenue producing space, could be added around the courtyard.

To my mind, this study, which would save the community millions, is still not quite bold enough. I propose we also shrink the central courtyard and cover it with a glass pyramid, creating an atrium that would transform the whole interior of the block. I'd like to be able to look across the 8th Avenue "great street" entrance plaza at a council chambers shining for all to see beneath its glass hat. Now that would be a City Hall worthy of our own time and time and place.

City planner Kevin Lynch famously named this time-overlaying strategy a "temporal collage." Places that artfully remember themselves generate a richness of urban experience that people continue to pay to visit in cities all over the world.

Jerry Diethelm of Eugene is an architect, landscape architect and a planning and urban design consultant.

LANE COUNTY BUDGET CUTS TO HIT HARD

Lane County's budget misery has only just begun. The county's budget committee approved the proposed budget in May, and the cuts kick in at the beginning of the fiscal year, July 1, with cuts already taking place.

Though much of the media furor has been over issues such as cuts to the jail and the sheriff's office, the cuts are hitting the public services designed to keep people out of jail and healthy just as hard. And local AFSCME union representative Jim Steiner says some of the cuts may cost more money than they save.

The Oregon secretary of state's office has chosen Lane as one of eight Oregon counties it will monitor "based upon 10 financial, economic and demographic indicators." A report released on May 31 says that on the positive side, Lane County has a low debt burden and it "also has good liquidity and the fifth largest fund balance in Oregon." On the other hand, in 2011 Lane "ranked next to last in per capita local revenues," and the county's permanent tax rate is the seventh lowest rate in Oregon. Lane is also in the bottom third of Oregon counties on public safety spending.

The Lane County jail has been issuing reports of "capacity based releases," or as the county likes to call them, CBRs, of inmates from the jail due to reduced jail beds. Who to release is decided in part by a score in a program called the "risk assessment tool" or for short, the RAT. The "score takes a plethora of data into account including the defendant/ offender's current charges, past convictions and rate of failure to appear in court," according to a news release by Sgt. Carrie Carver.

Steiner, who represents the county's AFSCME union, says the recent decision by the conservative majority on the County Commission to contract out jail health care services to a health care company called Corizon instead of using union nurses could actually cost money in the long run. Steiner says the union had requested a line-by-line explanation of how contracting out to Corizon would save money despite not reducing the number of staff, but says the county "said they couldn't do that."

A health care expert's report on Corizon's work at the Idaho State Correctional Institution says nursing mistakes or failures were likely to have resulted in some inmate deaths and one inmate wasn't told for seven months that he probably had cancer. Terminal and long-term care inmates sometimes went unfed and were left in soiled linens, the report said. If inmates were to file lawsuits over poor care, this could cost the county money, Steiner says.

He also questions the county's $191 million in investments while spending $5 million to $6 million each year to pay down more than $102 million in debt. "Why not look at liquidating some of those investments to pay off the debt?" Steiner asks. He says this question was not adequately addressed at the budget committee meeting.

County Administrator Liane Richardson did not respond to a request for comment on this before press time.

The county has more than $3 million invested with the Tennessee Valley Authority. The TVA is probably best known among conservationists for building dams that threatened to wipe out the endangered snail darter. These days the TVA has solar projects, a number of coal-fired plants and several nuclear power plants as well.

CIRCUS OF SOLIDARITY FOR ECOPRISONERS

The International Day of Solidarity with Eco-Prisoners is June 11, and in Eugene the event will be marked with a circus of sorts at the Wayne Morse U.S. Courthouse. Last year the day was celebrated in 30 cities around the world, according to Eugene's Civil Liberties Defense Center. Organizers say there will be jugglers, fire-breathers, stilts, music, clowns and other performers.

June 11 started as the international day of solidarity with Jeff "Free" Luers and all eco-prisoners, Luers himself says. He was sentenced to 22 years in prison for burning three SUVs at a Eugene car dealership in 2000. No one was injured in the fire. The sentence was much harsher than those imposed on other arsonists whose crimes were not politically or ecologically motivated.

Luers and the CLDC fought for, and won, a reduction in his sentence. He was released from prison in December 2009

Luers says, "Sadly, I was not among the last to go to prison for such radical actions. June 11 is now about Marie Mason and my friend Eric McDavid." He says McDavid is serving 19 years in prison as a convicted domestic terrorist "for something that never happened, in which the jury themselves said they didn't want to convict but felt that the judge had given them no choice."

Mason was sentenced to 22 years for her involvement in the burning of an office connected to genetically modified organism research and the destruction of a piece of logging equipment.

The event will be a circus "because the idea of justice in this country is a joke. Look at the recent Occupy uprising, people feel that injustice and inequality viscerally," Luers says. He adds the event "is a mockery of a court that dare dignifies itself with the word 'justice' when so much of what has come from it has been injustice."

Luers says events such as these do have an impact on prisoners, "And it had an impact on the people holding me too. Both positive and negative. I had guards that came in and tell me they saw my case and the protests on the news. They told my they thought I got a raw deal."

CONSERVATIVES GOT ADVANCE MEETING NOTICE

Is arranging an emergency meeting through serial emails and phone calls a violation of the open meetings law under the ruling by Judge Michael Gillespie? Recently released emails show the Lane County Commission's conservative majority decided to have a meeting to vote on an issue with less than 24 hours' notice. They did not contact progressive Commissioners Pete Sorenson and Rob Handy until less than an hour' and half before the 9 am meeting on May 3.

The controversial ruling by Gillespie that has been used to paint Handy and Sorenson in a negative light was never appealed, because the conservative majority voted not to do so. That ruling argued that Handy, Sorenson, Faye Stewart and former commissioner Bill Dwyer used serial emails to form a quorum and deliberate. Since Stewart and Dwyer were not named in the Seneca timber-funded suit, they were not part of the case.

The Oregon Legislative Counsel, the agency that provides legal research for the state Legislature and its members, reviewed Gillespie's ruling and concluded that the judge's reasoning "does not support the conclusion that a public meeting law violation occurred." It's only a violation of the open meetings law if a quorum deliberates together in private. But the Gillespie ruling still stands as far as Lane County goes.

SPORTS

EMFC AZUL STOMPS SPOKANE, 2-0

Rain fell hard on Friday, June 1, as Eugene Metro Azul Women's Fútbol Club (EMFC) took the pitch for their first home game of the season. The stands, home to a 620-person crowd of screaming fans of all ages, became a puddle-ridden waterway only minutes after the starting whistle was blown. But the atmosphere at South Eugene High School was jovial and spirited, with feet stomping against the metal and hordes of fans engaging in chants each time the excitement level on the pitch rose.

Azul's opponents, Spokane Shine, held possession well in the opening 20 minutes, but as the first half went on, EMFC became increasingly comfortable and confident, allowing Tahne Apo to score the first Azul goal not only of the night, but also of the entire season-to-date, in the 37th minute of the first half.

The second half saw the true excitement of soccer brought to spirited fans dressed in blue. For a town that has no prior experience with women's premier soccer, the last 45 minutes of the game were intense. The crowd cheered collectively as a Spokane Shine player was knocked down during a fair but tough challenge on the wing, and several near misses in the late stages of the half had the crowd on its feet, screaming for the ball to hit the back of the net. This request was answered swiftly and smoothly with nine minutes to spare as a goalkeeping error left Spokane's posts unguarded. For Caitlyn Jobanek, the conversion was a tap-in past a lone defender to put Azul up 2-0.

Unexpectedly, Spokane began to bounce back in the closing minutes, and in stoppage time Eugene goalkeeper Lindsay Parlee put in a remarkable effort to keep her clean sheet (shared with Elise Nord) intact, aiding EMFC Azul in achieving their first victory of the season. The next game is at 7 pm Friday, June 15, at South Eugene High School versus the Portland Rain.

Sponsored by the Lane County Chapter of the Oregon League of Conservation Voters, Surfrider Foundation and Environment Oregon. Eugene City Councilor Alan Zelenka will talk about the council discussion regarding banning plastic bags. Space is limited. To RSVP or for more information visit www.olcv.org/events or call Ashley at 968-8269.

• Guided hikes by Oregon Wild will include some in Lane County and the nearby Cascades this summer. See www.oregonwild.org for info and reservations and to get on the emailing list.

• Sustainability activist Jan Spencer of the River Road neighborhood is planning a speaking tour this June talking about "Creating a Safer, More Secure and Greener Neighborhood." The free talk begins at 7 pm Wednesday, June 13 at the Corvallis Public Library, followed by a talk at 6 pm Thursday, June 21, at the First Methodist Church, 1771 Harvard St. in Roseburg. Next, he will speak at 6 pm Wednesday, June 27, at the Pringle Creek Community, 3911 Village Center Drive SE, in Salem, He says he will be talking about "how neighborhoods, suburbia, human potential, social activation and uplifted values are all elements of creating a safer, more secure and greener neighborhood."

Emails obtained through a public records request show that while County Administrator Liane Richardson contacted Stewart by phone and Commissioners Sid Leiken and Jay Bozievich by email on the evening of May 2 about scheduling an "emergency meeting" to release documents alleging wrongdoing by Handy, she did not contact Handy or Sorenson until the next day. "There was no contact except for the email that went out around 7:40 am Thursday morning," Sorenson says.

Marianne Dugan, an attorney for Handy, received the emails as part of a public records request she filed after questions arose about the May 3 emergency meeting. She has not yet received all the records she asked for

Under Oregon law there must be justification in the minutes of the meeting for emergency meetings arranged with less than 24 hours' notice. The minutes of the May 3 meeting have yet to be released, though the minutes of five other meetings of the Lane County Board of Commissioners have appeared on the county website since then.

Handy has said the release of the documents was timed to maximize the damage that would be done to him in the May 15 primary election, and that by the time he is cleared of allegations of wrongdoing in asking for donations to offset the $20,000 he must pay as part of the Seneca lawsuit settlement, the election would be over. Handy lost to City Councilor Pat Farr, and Farr will take the North Eugene commission seat in January.

Dugan says she is not sure yet how these emails and phone calls between a quorum of commissioners will play out under the Gillespie ruling.

An outreach worker for the New Roads Program serving homeless youth, Sabini hits the street on Wednesdays and Saturdays, carrying snacks, socks, condoms and "bathroom cupboard stuff" in his backpack. Raised a Quaker in Skyview Acres, a cooperative community along the Hudson River, Sabini got started in mental health work as a conscientious objector in 1968. He picked up the saxophone around that time and played in bands that toured the Northeast from the 1970s to the '90s. He worked in a residential treatment center, finished college, married Lesley in '91, adopted Rose in '95, and taught English for 10 years to kids of Japanese fathers assigned to NYC. The family moved to Eugene, joining Lesley's sister, in 2002. "There was no work, so I volunteered at New Roads," says Sabini, who wound up with a job at New Roads' Center Point School for kids with mental health issues. "I've never worked so hard in my life, but kids got better." His work these days is varied: "I'll be cooking tomorrow night at New Roads," he says. "We serve lunch and breakfast all week." WHIT SUPER CLEAN-UP HEROES

If you're headed through the Whiteaker on June 10, there's a good chance you'll run into masked and caped avengers sweeping through to pick up trash.

This Sunday will be the fifth annual Whiteaker Clean Up and Community Celebration, an idea generated by Wayde Love. "It started out with me being on the community council and just wanting to make a really fun, cool clean-up," he says.

While on the Whiteaker Community Council, Love made contacts and networked with Sanipac and community business owners who were interested in cleaning up the neighborhood. He now receives donations from them every year to help out in the clean up. Love estimates that nearly 200 volunteers will participate this year.

Since the event's inception, Love thought wearing costumes would make for a more fun and celebratory approach. The costume types vary from year to year. He got the idea for superheroes this year after missing out on a superhero-themed party. But he also sees the inherent similarities between those who come out to clean up and dress up as crime fighters.

"It makes sense because we really are superheroes," he says. Love estimates they found about 80 used needles strewn about last year and pounds upon pounds of recycling and trash were picked up. "It really is a superhero thing when you come out," he says. "A lot of people want to do something good and it makes it kind of fun for them to do.'

The event starts at noon at Scobert Gardens Park with food to gear up for the day and a speech before groups will be divided up and assigned areas. Costumes are not required but encouraged. There will be live music and a raffle with prizes from local businesses including a gift certificate to Izakaya Meji and coffee from Wandering Goat. More info at http://wkly.ws/1am

Meanwhile, planning is well under way for the sixth annual Whiteaker Block Party from noon to 11 pm Saturday, Aug. 4. The big event has a Facebook page with 2.346 "likes."

IT'S ABOUT TIME

BY DAVID WAGNER

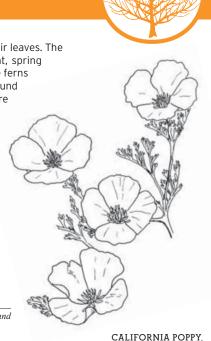

his is the greenest time of year. All the trees and shrubs have expanded their leaves. The leaves have not yet fully toughened up so most of them retain the bright, spring green that's my favorite color. Still, the lowlands are drying out. The licorice ferns have turned yellow-brown and are falling off the tree branches. Only the ground dwelling colonies in damp, shady spots are keeping their green for a few more

We notice that very few birds are coming to the feeders. Migrations are over and the nesting season is in full swing. The birds are protecting their territories so they don't gather at feeders. We will see them again with their fledglings.

The biggest surprise for us is the chickadee family using an old decorative nest box which was gifted to us many years ago. Corn cobs, millet heads and lichens were glued to make it attractive to birds but they hardly ever came to feed off it. Just as we were about to take it down because it was falling apart, chickadees started exploring it and now are feeding young. Unlike other nestlings I've known, these are very quiet to avoid bringing attention to themselves.

Vandals scratching the educational signs along Delta Pond trails brings a sad note to our walks. If they don't like nature, why don't they just stay away? No Azolla in the ponds this year but there are lots of poppies. They will bloom summer and into fall with occasional rainfall.

BARE-ASS BIKE RIDE

You may find yourself riding down the streets of Eugene for a cause this weekend. And you may be completely in the nude. Eugene's annual World Naked Bike Ride (WNBR), a mass protest of cyclists against oil dependency, initiated in 2006, is upon us again.

While it is a naked bike ride, you aren't necessarily expected to be naked. In fact, clothing is absolutely optional, says Eugene's current WNBR coordinator Ralph Forrest-Ball. Colorful costumes are encouraged, he says, allowing for better visibility by motorists. "A good superhero costume would be great," he says. And wearing your helmet when riding a bike is always encouraged.

About half the riders (between 60 and 80 riders total in past years) go completely naked, says Forrest-Ball. "Or they wear nothing but body paint." They'll be riding naked to emphasize their "indecent exposure" to automobiles, he says. "We ride our bikes naked, or nearly so, to remind fellow travelers that cyclists are vulnerable when sharing the road."

And people of all ages are welcome. Forrest-Ball says, "Anybody can spontaneously join, if they want to," he says, adding that he can only assume that anybody under 18 would be joining with parental permission.

Police spokeswoman Jenna McCulley says Eugene police aren't particularly concerned about this year's WNBR. "This isn't the first time they've hosted it," she says, "and past rides were peaceful and lawabiding."

While the route changes across years, all potential riders should expect to meet at the corner of Lawrence and Cheshire, one block west of Skinner Butte at 4 pm Saturday, June 9. The event is slated to start at 4:30 pm. It will probably be over around 6 pm, Forrest-Ball says, but that depends on what the riders decide.

"Last year the ride was about 7 miles; this year I think we're going to go a little bit longer," he says, somewhere between 8 to 8.5 miles. "We're operating by consensus," Forrest-Ball says, "if everybody wants to quit, OK, let's just quit."

ODFW TRAP DECISION

Last August a Gresham family's border collie named Maggie was caught and killed in a lethal trap set 45 feet from her backyard. A husky named Bella chewed off her own foot after being caught in an unmarked trap in the Boise National Forest

These incidents and others like them spurred Predator Defense, Cascadia Wildlands, the Humane Society of the United States and other groups to petition the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife to strengthen its trapping regulations. The ODFW Commission will listen to public comment on June 7 and make a decision, but most of the staff recommendations are not to change the regulations.

Scott Beckstead of the Humane Society, who will be testifying at the meeting, says, "I can't even say they are throwing us a bone; they are not even throwing us a scrap."

If an animal is caught in a trap, the trapper can wait 48 hours to seven days before going and checking, Sally Mackler of Predator Defense says. This means, if it isn't killed outright, an animal, whether it's a coyote or a pet dog, can suffer for two days to a week before someone comes along to find it.

The groups asked that the time between trap checks be reduced to 24 hours. In its June 7 "Oregon Furbearer Regulation Proposals" ODFW responded that staff proposed the time between checks not be reduced, citing issues such as travel costs for the trapper.

"The majority of states have 24-hour trap check time, and there's no reason we can't as well," says Mackler.

Beckstead says at least seven dogs and one cat have been caught in traps this year, but the number is probably higher because "let's face it, when trappers catch pets in their traps the incentive is not to report that at all."

The groups also proposed that traps be set back 100 feet from public trails. ODFW proposes to make the setback 50 feet from trails, 300 feet from public trailheads, and public campgrounds and picnic areas. ODFW says in its document that roads and waterways would not require the setback and adds an exemption conservations say renders the setback useless.

The trap that killed Maggie was set to kill nutria and was 45 feet from her back gate, along a waterway. "It's like landmines out there," Mackler says of the trapping on public lands.

Tagging the trap with the trapper's name and phone number was another of the suggestions the conservation and animal groups put forth. Currently traps are marked with the owner's license number. ODFW sees "no law enforcement advantage" for this change and the document says trappers fear people would Google their phone numbers and harass them.

Finally, the groups petitioned to have signs posted within a 5-foot radius of the traps, warning of the dangers. ODFW writes that 33 other states do not require signs to be posted and the other states had questions about increased trap theft and the difficulties of enforcement, as well as whether the signs were "littering." ODFW staff recommends not making the change to post signs.

"They can put these deadly devices out there that constitute a known risk and a known safety hazard, and they call signs littering," Beckstead says.

He says, "Hopefully the commission will heed their statutory mandate and make a decision that is balanced," adding that the staff recommendations are "completely in favor of the trappers, letting a small minority put all of Oregon at risk."

SLANT

• Tough economic times fuel anti-government sentiment. Under stress, we tend to look for simple solutions to complex problems. Vote "no" on any new taxes for public safety and start packing a handgun; that appears to be the dominant attitude in Josephine and some other counties that have grown dependent on O&C timber revenues for decades. Seven of those counties, including Lane, are in crisis, cutting even essential county services. Our property taxes are among the lowest in the state due to our historic reliance on O&C payments, but many county voters are loathe to raise property taxes, even to the minimal limits imposed by Measures 5, 47 and 50.

We might fare better than Josephine County in a tax levy to support county public safety, depending on how much of the money would be dedicated to crime prevention vs. punishment. But in the long term, the best strategy to raise our county tax base is to play to our strengths. Supporting education at all levels is vital to our economic future. Buying, banking and investing locally will keep money circulating in Lane County. Growing and consuming our own food is huge. And perhaps our greatest treasure is our county's livability. Let's protect our farmlands, water, air quality, our educational and cultural assets and support our small, independent businesses. They are all we have to carry us into the future.

- You gotta love Lane Community College President Mary Spilde and her elected board. They've taken a big leap to put up six stories of student housing across from the library in the middle of downtown Eugene. They hope 250 students will be living in Titan Court in the fall of 2012. Not dormitories, these are furnished apartments intended for students from LCC, the UO and even NCU. With no dining hall and no designated parking, these are truly urban apartments next to the bus lines and bike path. Rents will run from $650 to $850 per month, and a few will be as large as four bedrooms. They can be a big boost for our recovering downtown and. ultimately, a profit center for LCC. Both the apartments and the classroom/administrative building they adjoin are designed to be green learning environments for students and the community. Next question: What happens to the old LCC center in downtown Eugene?
- The huge turnout for the first home game of the Eugene Metro Azul Women's Fútbol Club last Friday indicates high-level soccer has a big future in Lane County. More than 600 people showed up to enthusiastically cheer the team to victory, despite the rain and on the same night as the world-class Prefontaine Classic at Hayward Field, First Friday ArtWalk downtown and a dozen other events. The next game, against Portland's club, will be at 7 pm Friday, June 15, at South Eugene High School.
- Not surprising that our own Gov. John Kitzhaber leads the nation in honesty with 100 percent of his statements being ranked true or mostly true, according to a recent ranking of governors as reported by the Uppity Wisconsin blog (see http:// wkly.ws/1an). Kitzhaber's stellar ranking by Politifact got little media attention due to embattled Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker being named "the #1 most dishonest governor in America" with only 22 percent of his statements getting a thumbs-up. Walker was followed in the bottom rankings by other "Pants on Fire" governors: Rick Perry, Lincoln Chafee and Chris Christie. Looks like Walker's lies, obfuscations and massive out-of-state funding prevailed as he survived a recall election this week. Another reason to cherish Oregon's relatively uncorrupt politics.
- Quaker scholar Peg Morton is one of our favorite local peace activists. She's a longtime community leader who has been involved in Taxes for Peace Not War, Community Alliance of Lane County (CALC), the Latin American Solidarity Committee, the decades-long campaign to close the notorious School of the Americas, and much more. Now she's writing a book about her lifetime of nonviolent peace activism and her numerous arrests and jail times. She's financing the printing of her book by selling copies in advance. Send a check for $10 to her at 510 Van Buren St., Eugene 97402.

To vaccinate or not?

Whooping cough can be prevented had a 2-year-old son, and I was concerned. I became one of those parents who worries about these vaccinations.

Catherine Clinton, a local naturopathic doctor, is just one of countless parents who've experienced misgivings related to the risks associated with vaccinations and with forgoing those vaccinations particularly in regard to immunizing infants and children against preventable diseases.

Clinton has created a supplement called VacciShield to help with vaccinations.

'You want the vaccination to work and you don't want the bad side effects," Clinton says. Getting vaccinated as a precautionary measure to avoid contracting ailments such as whooping cough carries the possibility of developing an adverse reaction to the very same vaccination that was meant to protect.

What puts this issue under a more recent light is the recent outbreak in the Pacific Northwast of the highly contagious bacterial infection known as pertussis, or whooping cough. Over the course of 2012, the disease has reached near-epidemic status in Washington state and has since passed into Oregon.

According to Oregon Immunization Program spokesperson Susan Wickstrom, the state of Oregon reached a yearly total of 248 cases in May, compared to 102 cases at the same time last year. As of May 21, 2012, Lane County has seen five cases of whooping cough.

Already this year in Oregon, Wickstrom says there have been 10 infants — three months old or younger — hospitalized as a result of whooping cough. Adults need to make sure they're up to date with their pertussis booster shots, she says, especially if they're around infants that are too powers that be to make sure the schedule [of vaccinations] actually takes in the consideration of the individual health of our children." She describes the two sides of the vaccination debate as butting heads - unnecessarily — all while sharing the same ultimate motive: to keep our children healthy. "We want to have the doctor tell us that, for public health, this is the best we can do," Clinton says, "but still we are left wondering, 'What is best for my child?"

So when is the best time to give this vaccination to people at high risk of contracting the infection, versus those at system's response, Clinton says. She adds, "I made sure every ingredient was doing double duty." VacciShield is specifically intended for infants and children.

The key is personalizing immune response to the individual rather than creating a blanket-solution for the whole community, Clinton says, because each individual with his or her own unique complex version of biology may require that different measures be taken to effectively vaccinate.

Having individualized plans where "you decide what works best for you," Clinton says, is the surest way to combat biological variability and cater to every individual based on his or her own need.

Clinton says she believes there needs to be research that addresses the best time to vaccinate based on the diverse societal makeup of multitudes of unique, individual immune systems — this in addition to governmental focus on a wider-based, community immunity. "Both are really important," Clinton says, "and one is totally ignored."

Rather than just vaccinating or not vaccinating, Clinton says she believes in the notion of offering individualized plans where patients can work with their doctor and decide what works best for them.

Clinton sees it as not so black and white: "You're either vaccinated or not. We're too busy pitting ourselves against each other," she says. "There need to be more options."

'As parents, we all worry about our kids, and we're all trying to do the best thing."

- Catherine Clinton, naturopathic doctor young to be immunized and hence more susceptible to infection.

Clinton, a naturopathic doctor and founder of WellFuture LLC, a vitamin supplement company, started investigating the issue of whether to vaccinate a child after facing the same difficult question about vaccinating her own son.

"I want to protect my son from these diseases," says Clinton, and whether or not to vaccinate is something she is continually being asked by the worried parents of her younger patients.

"As parents, we all worry about our kids, and we're all trying to do the best thing," says Clinton. "We don't trust the lower risk? "We're giving the same advice to everybody," she says, "and that's clearly not working."

To answer that question herself, Clinton took action toward finding a solution, both for her own child and for her patients She put together a supplemental blend of vitamins, probiotics and minerals specifically designed to accompany and relieve adverse effects on the system. These suppliments would be delivered across a schedule, or series, of vaccinations. She named the supplement VacciShield.

VacciShield was designed to act both as an immune booster and an antiinflammatory by bolstering the immune

ROLL DEEP IN WINE WEATHER

Cruising wine country safely, in style

With summer comes the weather we all love here in Oregon. Raincoats are removed, flip-flops are slipped on and outdoor patios open up. No one knows this last part better than local winery patrons. Summer is wine time.

And Oregon is wine country. But wine contains alcohol, and this does not mix well with driving unless you want to leave pieces of yourself scattered along our state's scenic byways or spend a night in the clink. Sure, you could motor out to one of the many wineries and have one, maybe two glasses of excellent Oregon pinot, then safely drive your sweetheart back home. Certain occasions, however, call for more than one glass of wine; more than one bottle of wine; hell, maybe even more than a few bottles. Sometimes the circumstances of celebration call for excess (as well as safety) — and nothing says excess like a limousine.

"Hey, if you wanna bump, you can plug your iPod right into here and it'll play through the stereo," Whit Hogard, limo driver for Sunshine Limo Service, says to me from behind the wheel. "The DVD player controls are right here and there's orange juice to go with that champagne if you want mimosas."

Hogard is dressed to the nines in suit and tie. With his shades on he could be a Secret Service agent, though his demeanor is far too amicable. The limo he pilots seats 14 people. It comes equipped with everything I wish I had in my living room, and then some.

"Everyone wants to do wine tours in the summer when the weather is better," says Hogard. "A DUI is more expensive than a limo."

The price of a limo ride ranges from $165 for a three-hour tour for four in a Lincoln Town Car, to $750 for 6 hours in a 16-passenger Cadillac Escalade. Tip and fuel not included.

Seated in a giant SUV stretch limousine and watching wine country blow by you through tinted windows is certainly a stylish way to enjoy a summer celebration. With enough wine in you and the music turned up loud, it can feel like you're pursuing happiness in your own personal Kid Cudi music video. And the best part is, you can sit back and enjoy the ride. Someone else is driving.

Hogard is Sunshine Limo Service's veteran driver, and you can tell from his almost statesmanlike rapport why he's the man.

With his hands at 10 and two on the steering wheel, Hogard explains the various reasons his clients cruise the wineries — weddings, engagements, anniversaries, birthdays, proposals, graduations, bachelor parties, the list goes on.

"Six hours is probably the perfect amount of time for a wine tour," Hogard says. "That way you can hit up about four wineries and have lunch at one of them." This leisurely impression of a wine-limo tour could suggest that Hogard's job is a piece of cake, but a deeper look into his duties reveals otherwise.

"You have to be a little bit of everything," Hogard says, after which he runs down a quick list of situations he's handled on the job. One of these includes a bachelor party where Hogard was forced to step between the soon-to-be groom and a "much larger angry man." Another story details his on-the-spot cleaning of the limo's exterior after a disgruntled homeless man hurled what appeared to be oatmeal at the windshield. "That was in downtown, though. Not out on a wine tour," Hogard clarifies.

As he's motoring me in comfort and style to the nearby Sarver Winery, Hogard explains that his primary goal is to make sure his passengers are having fun, no matter how much wine is involved. Of course, there are rules, like, what goes on in the limo stays in the limo, and if you throw up inside the limo, it's going to cost extra. As to this, Hogard adds, "Always let me know if you need me to pull over, for any reason."

Despite some of his hairier encounters, Hogard is unwavering when it comes to what he most loves about driving a limo. "People do these wine tours to celebrate things, and that specialness of the occasion is contagious," he says. "I realize how important these occasions are to people, and I love being a part of it." — Dante Zuňiga-West

WE OWN THE SUMMER

Music festivals in Oregon and beyond

Long, five-car-caravan convoys, open air, live music, face paint, dehydration, hordes of howling drunks with beers in hand and marijuana smoke rising in plumes above their heads: These are the tropes of summer for those who love music festivals, and there's no shortage when it comes to these monstrous gatherings.

In Oregon alone, there are quite a few festivals worth checking out this summer: Among them, MusicfestNW — which certainly holds the most urban setting, taking place at various locations around Portland — has a pretty killer lineup this year, ranging from Dinosaur Jr. to Beirut to Yelawolf, and there's an assload of smaller acts waiting to be discovered as well. If you're not looking to travel too far, this is a great option, although it's no overnighter — be warned, you're not going to find a campground full of wasted people to frolic with suddenly popping up in downtown Portland.

Pickathon is the most unique of the Oregon festivals that you can hit, considering its beautiful setting, great lineup and reputation for incredible fun. Pendarvis Farm is a gigantic and idyllic rural location in the midst of lush greenery, and the folks behind the scenes display a deft idiosyncrasy in the lineup they choose each year — apparently based entirely upon musical prowess rather than name recognition. This not only makes for a largely unknown lineup of damn good new music waiting to be checked out, but it means that the big names making it out there are to be revered and savored. This year you can catch Blitzen Trapper, Neko Case and Dr. Dog, to name a few.

Unfortunately, EMRG+N+SEE, which is normally an absolving (albeit underground as shit) highlight of the Oregon festival circuit, will not be happening this year. Sorry folks. This stands as a reminder that it's very important to support music as well as the people who allow us to watch it live, no matter how underground — because if not, it all hits the endangered list sooner or later.

Sitting across our border like a noisy neighbor, California sits puffing out its chest and yelling "check out how big my balls are." It's no secret that our pals to the south know how to party — we can all thank 2Pac, who incidentally made an "appearance" at this year's Coachella festival, for that knowledge — and they have some awesome music festivals: Outside Lands, Earthdance, et al., but importantly, the Rock the Bells hiphop festival has, as always, some of the most ridiculous artists on its lineup this year, including Deltron 3030, Ice Cube and Bone Thugs-N-Harmony.

The Earthdance Global Festival for Peace is also well worth attending: Set in sunny Vallejo, Calif., this three-day September festival is held simultaneously all over the world, and serves as a linking prayer for peace — a message that most should have no qualms getting behind. While exact details on this year's festival are still TBA, Earthdance is one you should keep an eye on.

So yeah, grab your camping shit, prepare the hot dogs and crack open the Hamm's, go clear out a big ol' chunk of your summer schedule and start planning. You definitely won't regret it. — Andy Valentine

GETTING BACK TO THE GARDEN

Bilingual summer camp sprouts from grassroots

There is perhaps no better teacher than Mother Nature. Her curriculum is seasonal and her pedagogy is patience. And though we may at times ignore her lessons, her classroom remains willing to receive us. It is this truth that inspired Lydia Scott and Leela Greensberg to create the Grateful Growers Summer Camp for kids age 5-10.

"Kids need to be outside more, engaging the natural world and learning about where food comes from," Greensberg says.

Based out of the community garden at The Village School, Grateful Growers Summer Camp will run Aug. 6-10 and Aug. 20-24, with a bilingual program focused on permaculture, Spanish and Waldorf curriculum.

"It's going to be a lot of planting and harvesting and preparing food," Greensberg says. "Kids will be learning about soil and insects and the communal aspects of growing food."

During the academic year, Greensberg teaches part-time at The Village School, where Scott functions as the garden coordinator; between these two is a combined 20 years of childcare, teaching and gardening. Although Grateful Growers is its own operation and independent of The Village School, Greensberg and Scott received the go-head to base their work out of the school's garden — a well-established plot of earth that will serve as a classroom to the campers.

"The outdoor classroom is an important one," Scott says. "We wanted to offer kids a camp where they are connected to their food and the earth."

Food is the best way to connect people to the natural world, Scott says, and as far as she and Greensberg are concerned, the earlier this connection is established in someone, the better. But it won't be all seedlings and spades for these campers. The traditional staples of any solid summer camp, such as games, field trips, storytelling and art projects, will be thrown into the mix as well — but with a bilingual twist.

"It's really important for kids to be exposed to more than one language," Greensberg says. "Having the bilingual part of the camp puts them around Spanish in a way that is functional and can help them learn it better."

Greensberg says the campers will be spoken to in Spanish from time to time, as well as being told stories in Spanish as well. She says that while the camp is not intended to be a full-immersion program, the campers will be engaged in Spanish every day.

Although this is Grateful Growers Summer Camp's first year, Scott and Greensberg foresee the program being a long-term project that will nurture the community and hopefully reach kids who would otherwise not be able to attend a summer program.

"We are looking into getting grants for next year's program," Greensberg says. "That way we can reach families who don't have the money to put a kid in summer camp. It didn't happen this year because we are so busy getting started up, but soon." — Dante Zuńiga-West

FREE-ROAM FROLIC FANS FLAME

Eugene's answer to The Amazing Race

The scavenger hunt is an activity so egregiously underrated by the adult world as naïve or childish that it really sucks the fun out of all that nostalgia. I ask you this: What would a child's Easter be without an egg hunt? What would playing pirate be without an "X" marking the booty spot?

This said, there have been attempts at adultifying the scavenger hunt — CBS' The Amazing Race, for instance — but we can't all be on national television, so what about those of us who don't mind feeling "naïve" for an afternoon? Or those of us who want to perform arbitrary tasks at breakneck speed in the name of good fun? The May 19 Frolic Grand Prix had the answer, and it will again on Aug. 25, during the Eugene Celebration.

The self-proclaimed "running, thinking, biking, laughing adventure across Eugene" takes the child and makes it wild. Some of the outlandish tasks contestants needed to perform during the last Frolic certainly weren't designed for kids. The race itself found its hub (start line and finish line) at Monroe Park, but beyond the perimeter of that grassy safe house stood five challenges waiting to be conquered: a dinosaur spelling bee, a beer chug/hot wing chowdown, folding a corner sheet, recreating a photograph and a pop quiz about biofuel.

Beyond the fact that these tasks had potential to be taxing outright, there was another matter facing the 23 teams that signed up to compete: transportation.

With each task occurring at an individual local business, watching contestants voyage efficiently in teams of two was a display of improvisational magic: Tandem bicycles, fanny-pack adorned joggers and folks mapping routes on smart phones and various GPS systems ran wild in the streets surrounding Monroe Park, with each team covered in spirited garb and colorful trim.

Sweat-soaked racers delegated among themselves the chugging of a 12-oz. Ninkasi's Spring Reign and the consumption of a single insane sauce wing at Hot Mama's Wings.

"When did it get so hot in here?" remarked one exasperated, purple-wigged fella upon entering the joint. "I'll take the beer."

Over at Laughing Planet Café, customers were overwhelmed with mirth and excitement as they held up plastic dinosaurs before the eyes of exhausted contestants. Here the racers battled with language — an admirable foe if ever there were one — as they attempted to spell the names of various prehistoric beasts without the aid of pen and paper. Turns out reciting the word S-T-E-G-O-S-A-U-R-U-S is a lot more daunting without a physical cross-reference.

Back at the hub, Jurassic 5 blasted from a PA, greeting waves of exhausted racers — most of whom saved the photo re-enactment for last.

For the Indie Pop Soda-sponsored task at McDonald Theatre, racers locked up their bikes and set about snapping cell phone pictures (or, for the less technologically advanced, furiously memorizing) a photo. Upon returning to Monroe Park, the teams had to replicate the image. The results of this one were utterly bizarre, but full of salty smiles nonetheless.

After advancing to the finals, three teams made their way down to the Ninkasi Brewery in order to complete their last, furiously competitive task: solving before anyone else a jigsaw puzzle made of blocks. In true scavenger spirit, the first to complete their puzzle raised the flag of victory high for all to see and were proclaimed the winners.

"It all went really well," Frolic-founder Bryan Jensen says. "The sponsors are happy, we're happy. We had a couple lessons learned, but overall it was fairly smooth and a lot of fun."

The good news is that this is definitely not the last you'll hear of Frolic Grand Prix. The next circuit takes place Aug. 25 during Eugene Celebration weekend. Sign up before June 23 to compete. This is a highly recommended stop for your summer — just make sure you bring your game face and a not-so-childish sense of adventure. — Andy Valentine

LEGENDS OF THE SUMMER

Mythical faerie festival enchants Eugene

Faerieworlds, the yearly festival that encourages attendees to "live your legend," returns. Celebrating fantasy, magic and, of course, faeries, this annual event of pixie dust and gossamer wings provides everything a faer-folk enthusiast could want. By bringing in internationally acclaimed authors and artists, featuring a "Mythic Marketplace" and presenting a diverse group of musicians from the world over, Faerieworlds — at Howard Buford Recreation Area (aka Mount Pisgah) July 27-29 — caters to the varying tastes of those who adore the faerie realm.

Recent Rock and Roll Hall of Fame inductee Donovan is headlining this year, premiering his original show "The Living Crystal Faery Realm," a multi-media extravaganza. Famous for his raspy vocals paired with catchy strumming tied together with rousing lyrics, Donovan is a must-see performer at this year's festival.

Baka Beyond, described by its members as Afro-Celtic, will also hit the stage. Featuring musicians from Ghana, Sierra Leone, Brittany and Senegal, the group prides itself on having expansive influences and its ability to "cross boundaries between age, race and culture." Utilizing a wide variety of instruments including marimba, djembe, kalabash, kora and more, Baka Beyond creates a unique sound that pays homage to the Baka tribes.

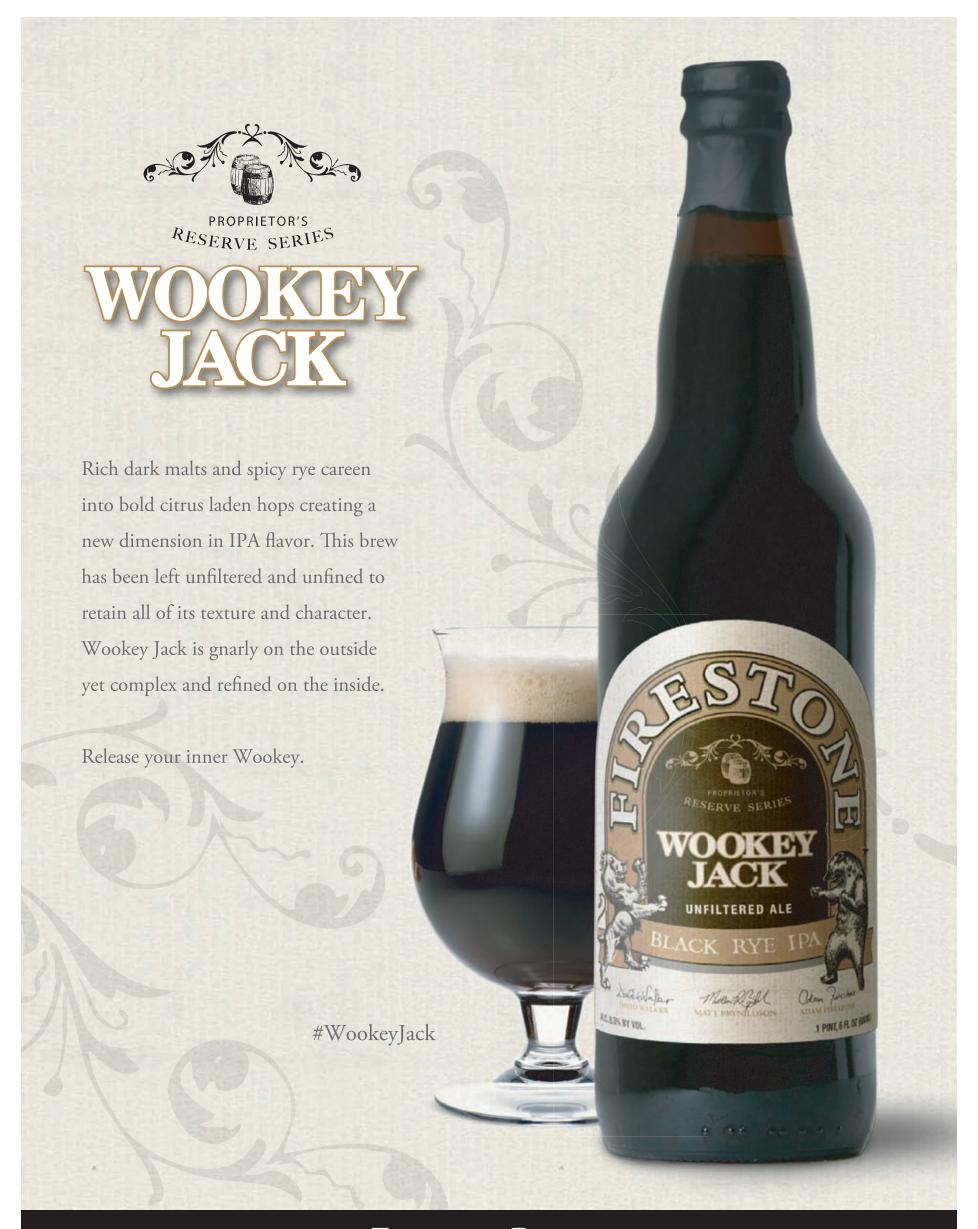

Niyaz, an Iranian trio hailing from Los Angeles and formed by Grammy-nominee DJ/ producer Carmen Rizzo, will perform its otherworldly music with a modern aesthetic. Niyaz fuses traditional Iranian music with electronica, creating an intensely beat-driven sound. By applying electronic effects to instruments such as the kamaan and robab, Niyaz produces hypnotizing melodies that are impossible not to dance to.

Faerieworlds founders Emilio and Kelly Miller-Lopez will be lighting up the stage late into the night with their band Woodlands. Combining mellow beats and soft vocals, Woodlands creates the perfect soundtrack for relaxation after a long day of jamming to folklore and dancing with faeries.

Faerieworlds promises to be full of "tricksy goblins, pillaging pirates, frisky faeries, beguiling bellydancers, lost boys, steam punks and horned ones." Guests are encouraged to participate in costume workshops, where they can characterize their own legends and fantasies through intricate, hands-on costume design. The perfect occasion to dance in the summer, Faerieworlds is unlike any other festival on the West Coast. — Hailey Chamberlain

Shrewsbury Renaissance Faire An "educational interactive adventure in history," this ren fair invites you to get blythe and merry "just 15 miles and 500 years away" from Corvallis. From Merry Merchants to Fyne Feating to Friar Tuck's Forest, Shrewsbury has oodles to offer: reenactments, grub, bonnets and bloomers, and ever so much more. The Villager Guidebooke, which is ostensibly meant for those applying to vend or otherwise work the faire, is a surprisingly entertaining read, but if you start asking "How stands the hour?" you're absolutely allowed to insist that you be parched and must away. 10am-6pm today & tomorrow, Kings Valley, www. shrewfaire.com or 929-4897. $11, $5 ages 6-12 & seniors, under 5 FREE.

OUT/LOUD is the biggest women's queer music festival in the Northwest and it's happening right here in downtown Eugene in Kesey Square. Once called Lesbopalooza, the name was changed to be more inclusive. The day will be filled with spoken word artists, slam poetry and an onslaught of performers including Tender Forever, Siche Green-Mitchel, Nikole Potulsy and many more. OUT/LOUD celebrates the diversity of queer women and is also paving the way for progressive and alternative music in Eugene. With a beer garden full of local brews and food vendors serving up scrumptious snacks, you can't go wrong with this event.

Headlining the festival is Nina Sky, a genre and boundary-broaching music group made up of identical twins from Queens, NY, with as much talent as it has attitude. Nina Sky fuses hip hop, reggaeton, pop and R&B into modern masterpieces that have caught the attention of several high-brow record labels. The twins' 2004 hit single "Move Your Body" put them on the charts and they've been burning up tracks (and frequent flyer miles) ever since.

OUT/LOUD is 12pm-11pm Saturday, June 9, at Kesey Square.

Loved By All, Feared by Fish
Local painter John Babbs died in April, but his artwork survives him. A prolific member of Eugene's art scene, Babbs made countless friends playing basketball at the YMCA, was one of Ken Kesey's original Merry Pranksters and was an initial participant in Kesey's Acid Test. But later in his life, Babbs' interest turned to fly fishing and painting.

"I'd describe his technique as rustic with a psychedelic edge," says Ken Babbs, John's brother.

Painting mostly with palette knives and oil, sometimes working with watercolor, Babbs' art conveys a passionate love for the outdoors. He often painted scenes of fishing and landscapes, sometimes interspersed with self-portraits.

Ken Babbs says that understanding nature was an essential part of his brother's artistic process. "He was very in tune with nature and the river, he knew every fishing hole along the McKenzie River," he says.

The thick strokes and bright colors of Babbs' paintings portray life on the river. It's easy to see the movement and grace Babbs perceived when he was on the water.

But Babbs' paintings aren't the only thing carrying on his legacy; he was also an author who wrote Prankster Memoirs, a recollection of his time as a Merry Prankster, and Yellow Leaves, a novel set in Eugene about a cinematographer/fly fisher who finds love on a camping trip. To his core, John Babbs embodied the vintage and classic elements of Eugenean lifestyle, and was loved by many.

"John seems to live outside time, outside money, outside fashion, outside most things that might demand ... attention," recalls friend

John Babbs' work goes on display June 8-10 at the New Zone Gallery (164 West Broadway). A free reception is 1 pm Saturday, June 9. – Hailev Chamberlain

Snow What?

Stupid, silly, pretty, sloppy, dopey, stubbly & dull

SNOW WHITE AND THE HUNTSMAN: Directed by Rupert Sanders. Screenplay by Evan Daugherty; screen story by Daugherty, John Lee Hancock and Hossein Amini. Cinematography, Greig Fraser. Editors, Conrad Buff IV and Neil Smith. Music, James Newton Howard. Starring Kristen Stewart, Charlize Theron and Chris Hemsworth. Universal Pictures, 2012. PG-13. 127 minutes. * * ☆ ☆ ☆

hen a movie poster trumpets not the film's stars but that it's "From the producers of Alice in Wonderland," we should see that as a bright and telling signpost: The film to come will be full of brief flashes and thin shadows, hollowness and pretty costumes, a mass-produced print hung in an antique frame.

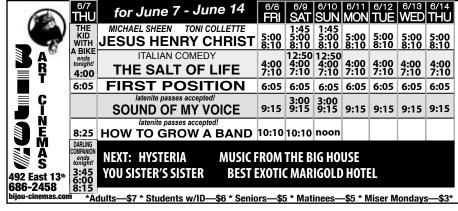

Snow White and the Huntsman looks like the dark, capital-S Serious flipside to March's Mirror, Mirror, though Tarsem Singh had a better handle on the story's emotional complexities. This one opts for a rather more Narnian take: Early in the film, poor Snow (Kristen Stewart), locked away in a tower for something like a decade. recites the Lord's Prayer as she lights her fire. This is your cue, darlings. Snow White is totally Jesus. She's the chosen one, the spirit of life, the very embodiment of purity, and all will be in her kingdom as it is in heaven.

There is, actually, something to be said for someone - someone more creative and brave than the makers of this film — wildly reinterpreting "Snow White" as a feminist Jesus, but this movie doesn't do that. It just sloppily crosses the streams of myth and fairy tale with no regard for logic, sense or good storytelling. The nonsensical things in Snow White and the Huntsman range from the silly (how does a girl locked in a tower for so long know how to stay on a galloping horse?) to the borderline offensive: There's something deeply uncomfortable about the sight of Ian McShane, Toby Jones, Nick Frost and others done up as dwarves. Was their relative star power really so vital to the Charlize Theron growls and shouts and glowers as an underwritten evil queen; Stewart is a passable Snow, but Snow is a blank slate of innocence. It's hard to attach anything to her other than a ribbon sash proclaiming her goodness. Evil wants her heart, good wants her on the throne and the Huntsman (Chris Hemsworth) gives her the advantage. Hemsworth, playing a drunken lout with stubbly, sensitive abandon, swings an axe and lets his hair get greasy with equal enthusiasm, and it's not his fault the film is so certain it's getting a sequel that it doesn't finish his story.

It barely finishes its own story, for that matter. Director Rupert Sanders, in his first feature film, is perfectly competent at pretty, Lord of the Rings-influenced shots of travelers traipsing across the land (these shots make little sense unless you assume it always takes twice as long to leave a Dark Forest as it does to enter it). He does a nice thing or two with a bridge troll and some CGI birds, but much of the film — action sequences and otherwise — is repetitive and choppy, and never more so than at the end, when good defeats evil, puts on a pretty dress and calls it a day without so much as a graceful speech. When you're Jesus/Aslan/the Chosen One, I guess you assume we've heard it all before.

I Want to Believe

Sound of My Voice is this year's sleeper triumph

f it's true that nationalism and immigration are the most dangerous issues confronting the planet in this early 21st century, it's reasonable to suggest that, at the spiritual level, our soul's greatest peril now lies in the tension between belief and nothingness — a crisis of faith that finds the New Age con pitted against the death of God, where our need to believe is crucified by our suspicion that all our myths are shattered lies. It's the curse of the Enlightenment. Don't laugh: This existential dilemma has us all on the blocks, and we can no more hide from it than we can safeguard against the wandering lunatic with a loaded gun.

This looming cosmic crisis — our millennial reckoning with mortal belief, with meaning itself — is the subliminal subject of director Zal Batmanglij's haunting new film, Sound of My Voice, though it's hardly necessary to talk fancy about this as-yet-undiscovered masterpiece. Like the finest works of art, this movie — about a pair of lovers (Nicole Vicius and Christopher Denham) infiltrating an underground cult that may or may not be a suicidal scam hatched by a woman (Brit Marling) claiming to be a visitor from the year 2052 — finds an unimpeachable balance in all its constituent parts: The story, co-written by Marling (who also wrote and starred in 2011's excellent Another Earth) is expertly paced and excruciatingly suspenseful, playing out with the brooding, reptilian intensity of film noir; the acting is unflashy and naturalistic, compelling a suspension of disbelief that feels like one long nightmare; and the seamless script, like such classics as Chinatown or The Philadelphia Story, presents a blueprint for deft storytelling, hiding its philosophical depth in the warp and woof of mesmerizing narrative.

Okay, enough, let's out with it: This movie kicked my ass. It's easily the best movie I've seen this year, and one of the best of the past decade. Hypnotizing. Horrifying. Unshakable. Brit Marling is a genius. And she's only just begun.

Sound of My Voice opens Friday, June 8, at the Bijou; bijou-cinemas.com

Gwenyambiras, At Large

Musekiwa Chingodza is an international phenomenon occuring every other year in the U.S. and Canada. Chingodza, a dancer, singer and mbira master from Murehwah, Zimbabwe, is known for his teaching and spirited performances all over the U.S., and particularly in Eugene, where his protégé Bud Cohen lives.

So, how does a white kid from Eugene, Ore., team up with a Zimbabwean gwenyambira (great mbira player) and create the world-music duo known as Mhofela? The story goes like this: In 1997 Cohen's parents, serious world-music lovers with a taste for adventure, traveled to Zimbabwe with the specific intent of finding gwenyambiras to help promote mbira music and build a scene back in the states. With them, they brought their 17-year-old son, who possessed the same passionate love of music. During this journey, Cohen met Chingodza, who took the teenager under his wing and schooled him in mbira playing.

Cohen lived with Chingodza in the rural village of Mwangara. "It was an eye-opening and life-shaping experience for me," Cohen says. "I was humbled by how people treated me and encouraged my playing [of mbira]."

Not necessarily a household name in the U.S., the mbira (also known as a thumb piano) is an instrument composed of a wooden soundboard and hard steel keys that is then placed into a "deze" (a round gourd) that acts as a resonator. Though usually promoted through the college and cultural-center tour circuits, mbira music has large fan bases in the urban communities of Colorado, New Mexico and California's Bay Area.

Since their initial meeting in '97, Chingodza and Cohen formed Mhofela, and they have toured both coasts and the Midwest, bringing mbira music to the masses. The duo recently released the 9-track album Tomutenda Mambo and continues to play live shows together when Chingodza is in country.

"This music is very spiritual and very authentic," says Cohen. "I always look forward to Musekiwa coming to town." Mhofela's album release show is 6 pm Thursday, June 7, at Cozmic; $5, free entry with CD purchase. – Dante Zuñiga-West

Blooming and Booming

I feel old. Young bands are listing "mid-aughts indie" as their influences – groups like Pavement, Guided By Voices, etc. The stuff that was new and cool when I was in my twenties is now establishment. I suppose I should be glad that music is still inspiring new bands like Eugene's Groundblooms to pick up guitars. But to quote James Murphy of LCD Soundsystem: "I'm losing my edge, the kids are coming up from behind."

If I'm going to be the grey-haired dude at rock shows, Groundblooms are a band I'll be seeing. The group, featuring brothers Max and Michael Knackstedt, has just released its debut album You're A Free Spirit, and it's a solid piece of artistry.

Groundblooms want you to think they're not as good as they are. Tempos lag, guitars dip slightly out of tune, the production, plain and unassuming, at times captures the sound of "a band in a room" – and other times, is awash in messy guitar-skronk.

You're A Free Spirit is deceptively lo-fi, cloaking solid songwriting with a hook-filled "we-could-care-less" attitude. The songs often flirt precariously with mayhem, but they always pull out at the last second, seeking refuge in Michael Knackstedt's rich and melancholy baritone. Lead track "Pidgin English" recalls Weezer or Pavement at their best – jingle-jangle guitars meet layers of noise, cascading and calamitous drums and a tune that would fit nicely on Pavement's Slanted and Enchanted or Weezer's Pinkerton.

Someone who went to college in the '90s or mid-2000s might feel a little "heard this all before" about Groundblooms, but this is the sound of vintage college rock. Here's hoping it never goes out of style and we continue to hear good things from a young and vital band with tons of potential.

Groundblooms play with Royal Blue 10 pm Saturday, June 9, at Luckey's; $3. – William Kennedy

You're the Guy from the Hamburger Train, Right?

Writing about Primus is like trying to stuff a baboon into a sack – there's no right way to do it. What can be said about a band that so distinctly filters out any shades of gray? How many times can a writer sit down and type out how Les Claypool is the Zappa of the MTV generation? Few prominent bands have inspired such fervent devotion or dismissal. If you're not thinking (as the band would say) "Primus sucks!" you're probably thinking Primus sucks. Fence sitting is a relatively unknown phenomenon in the Primus universe.

After a career spanning three decades, these guys are as Primus as they've ever been. Claypool and Co. show no signs of shutting down the ride, as they prepare to come to town next week in support of the group's latest album, Green Naugahyde. For those of you already familiar with the band, nothing written here will change your mind – you already have your ticket or you're busy winding your cassette copy of Kill 'Em All. (Fun fact: Claypool tried out for Metallica after Cliff Burton died only to be told that he was "too good")

But for those of you with ears free of sonic beef and cheese, I say this: Primus is the soundtrack to a sixth-circle carnival designed by Tim Burton and the Swedish chef from the Muppets. This band is what would happen if a young Tom Waits listened to Black Sabbath and replaced his usual junk and whiskey with a steady diet of psychedelics and speed. If you want to see one of the most original bands of the last 30 years, led by one of the greatest bass players to ever walk the earth, go to this show.

Primus plays 7:30 pm Tuesday, June 12, at the Cuthbert Amphitheater; $39.50 adv., $45 door. – Mark Sullivan

Head-banging and Heroines

When Portland folk move to Eugene, a common complaint is that there's not enough punk rock. Jean Grey provides something we don't get enough of here – loud, angry punk music that gives you a feeling in your gut that can only be quelled through moshing. Reminiscent of the authentic garage bands we all loved in high school, Jean Grey is a group formed in 2006 and named after a voluptuous super-heroine.

The band's new album comes with the ominous title Abysmal. After setting such a dark stage for their debut, the members of Jean Grey step up to the plate, creating a diverse set of songs with names like "Ovarian Cyst" and "Dissection of a Human Body." The band is impressive in its ability to pair fast drumbeats, heavy guitar parts and lyrics that sound as if Steven King got hold of a microphone.

Comparable to groups like The Black Dahlia Murder and Beneath the Massacre, Jean Grey has already achieved its own version of local fame right here, and the group has national tour chops. Formed by drummer Charlie Wilson, these guys have been playing up and down the West Coast for years. The band is currently at work on its first concept album, based on the Cthulhu Mythos by H.P. Lovecraft.

Priding itself on a professional approach to showmanship, with wild thrashing and synchronized head-banging, Jean Grey puts on a show that is not to be missed.

Jean Grey plays 8 pm Thursday, June 14, at WOW Hall; $5 adv., $8 door. – Hailey Chamberlain

Bach and Before

UO concert series wrap-up, and more he Oregon Bach Festival doesn't start till the end of June, but if you just can't wait to get that summer Baroque fix there are a couple of enticing early music concerts this weekend.

The Oregon Bach Collegium joins members of Ensemble Primo Seicento on Friday, June 8, at Central Lutheran Church to perform music of the Italian Baroque. The Bach Festival concerts increasingly feature performances on the instruments and in styles the composers intended, and the members of the OBC (unrelated to the festival) and its guests also specialize in playing replicas of ancient instruments such as the sackbut (an early trombone), Renaissance violin, cornetto (sort of a cross between a trumpet and recorder, eventually supplanted by the oboe), dulcian (predecessor of the bassoon) and organ.

Like those gorgeous instruments, the early 17th-century Italian composers — Frescobaldi, Donati, Rossi, Cesare, Riccio and Cima — are much more rarely heard than later (German) Baroque composers like Bach and Handel, but their best music is no less enchanting and expressive. Those latter two composers' music will also ring out on Sunday, June 10, at First Methodist Church, along with tunes by Tchaikovsky and others in a concert of solo music for handbells, rung by Beth Mays.

Speaking of 18th-century German Baroque composers, you can hear music by one of the greatest, Bach's contemporary George Frederic Handel, on Saturday, June 9, and Sunday, June 10, at Beall Concert Hall. There's an Italian connection, too, because Handel's 1724 opera, Julius Caesar in Egypt, not only features a Roman title character but is also considered one of the composer's greatest operas in Italian. You won't see "authentic" costumes or sets, though. This UO Opera Ensemble production sets the story of Caesar vs. Ptolemy in space — planet Egypt — and gives it a science-fiction flavor. Regardless of the trappings, the music is some of Handel's most tuneful, with glorious arias that will tingle the tentacles of listeners in any galaxy.

That's one of the last UO concerts of the season as the university wraps up its academic year. On Sunday, June 10, the University Percussion Ensemble plays contemporary works at Aasen-Hull Hall, and the acclaimed UO Gospel Ensemble will sing its rousing songs at Erb Memorial Union (EMU) Ballroom. UO student Dan Meinhardt, who's completing his master's degree in jazz studies, releases his first album, Go West (recorded at the university), in a June 9 concert at the Jazz Station. The saxophonist's group plays original compositions along with covers of jazz containing prominent 1960s and '70s influences.

Meinhardt performs in the sextet of another UO alum, trombonist/composer Joe Freuen, in the latest Broadway Avenue House Concert (911 W. Broadway near Monroe Park) Saturday, June 16. Freuen, who's recently returned to Eugene from graduate studies at the renowned Manhattan School of Music, claims influences as diverse as Radiohead and Nine Inch Nails as well as more traditional jazz inspirations like Miles Davis. He's worked with the Emerald City Jazz Kings, Cherry Poppin' Daddies and others. The Daddies saxman Jesse Cloninger is also in the band, along with Portland guitarist Bill Marsh (who'll also play in Meinhardt's show), another UO alum, drummer Jason Palmer, and other local jazz stalwarts.

You can still hear some jazz influence in the music of the great singer songwriter Dan Hicks, who on June 8 brings his Hot Licks band back to The Shedd. A true West Coast legend whose pedigree stretches back to the pioneering mid-1960s San Francisco rock/jug band The Charlatans, Hicks embraces jazz, blues, Western swing and laugh-out-loud lyrics. In a Portland performance last year, his sharp wit and sly tunes seemed as snappy as ever, and his more recent songs stood up to classics like "I Scare Myself" and "Where's the Money?"

The Shedd also opens its annual summer musical June 14-17. This time it's the ever-popular 1966 Bob Fosse-Neil Simon-Dorothy Fields/Cy Coleman show Sweet Charity, adapted from Fellini's 1957 film Nights of Cabiria. Boasting brassy classics like "If My Friends Could See Me Now" and "Big Spender," this production by director/choreographer Richard Jessup and music director Robert Ashens showcases Laura Sue Hiszczynskyj, Chas King, Ron Judd and Dylan Stasack.

Savoring the Pride

Our own college, our own wines his year, after decades as a teacher of writing and literature at Lane Community College, I'm finally retiring, takin' off my chaps, hangin' up my spurs, drapin' my guns over the bedpost, kickin' off my boots and slouchin' to the rockin' chair. And lest some taxdodgin' right-wingnut works up a froth about my becoming a PERS burden, I'd like to point out that I've paid my dues: I'm 69, started paying taxes when I was 16, taught my first college-level class at UO in 1966, did 10 years at UO, five years at PSU, taught my first class for LCC in 1981. I've never had

But I'm not sure I really know how to stop. Lately, I've often found myself stopped, staring, especially at the gardens and grounds of LCC, at the hordes of students bustling to and from classes, at the dozens of staff and faculty who daily work in the minds. And I've wondered: Do the citizens of Lane County who make this place possible really get enough chances to savor the pride they so rightly deserve to feel?

a summer off. So I'm not much inclined to listen to the whining of some stingy shill who got rich by gambling with other people's money then, win or lose, charging fees for the privilege. I'm pretty clear here on who's the host and who's the parasite.

Public education at all levels has been under relentless attack, especially in the last 20 years. Budgets have been slashed repeatedly; then, when classes have swollen in size and days cut in number to the degree that teachers can no longer teach effectively then the critics want teachers to carry the blame for schools' decline. Some anti-tax twit pipes up: "Those kids aren't learning, 'cause the teachers aren't teaching. Cut their damn budgets and maybe they'll start." That kind of thinking, if it continues, will lead public education into a black hole.

For now, LCC is holding its own, despite a decade of budget-cutting and soaring enrollments. Only rational cooperation between the college and the staff and faculty unions have prevented a groupmelting disaster. Citizens of Lane County who seek a measure of civic sense should visit LCC they're always welcome - stroll the campus, see what their support has built: the beautifully tended flowers and shrubs, many of them serving as laboratories for biology and botany classes; the state-of-the-art Health Sciences building, essential to developing — and employing — the next generation of nurses, medical office assistants, lab techs and others; the newly completed Longhouse, a giant step toward restoring pride and recognition of Oregon's Native peoples; the Culinary Arts and Hospitality Management program, a lean operation that nevertheless trains our future chefs, cooks, events planners and others; diesel tech, computer sciences, foreign languages, the Lane Aviation Academy. I can't list them all, but the people of Lane County have together made this fine college possible and they deserve a little buzz of community pride, especially now when nasty negativists have tried to make "community" a dirty word.

And when you get home, pull a cork on a nice little wine, also a product of our own community and neighbors. Try, for example, Territorial Vineyards 2011 Riesling ($12), such a pretty little white, just off-dry, its delicate touch of natural sweetness accenting the flavors that mimic the essence of fresh pears. Whip up a stirfry of our farmers' spring veggies; make some music with this charming riesling.

Or taste the pink in Stanton 2011 Pinot Noir Rosé ($13). This is no cloying, schlocky "blush"; flavors trip across the palate — strawberries, rose petals, cherries, rhubarb — and just cry for another sip.

Lane County's own college, Lane County's tasty wines: My heart swells with gratitude for being a part of you, and having you a large part of me. Thanks. GW

I must be dreaming, Milkman Dan. We haven't had one single complaint about you from any customers in over a week. 200 I've been taking steps, sir.

You see, I finally realized that at this stage of my career, it was high time I started thinking a little more about my "legacy.

Very admirable. I'm glad to hear that you want to be remembered by all as an exemplary milkman.

Haha! Like that would ever happen. I was referring to my legacy as a serial kidnapper. The "missing" don't call with complaints.

free will astrology by rob brezsny

ARIES (March 21-April 19): If your destiny has gotten tweaked by bias or injustice, it's a good time to rebel. If you are being manipulated by people who care for you – even if it's allegedly for your own good – you now have the insight and power necessary to wriggle free of the bind. If you have been confused by the mixed messages you're getting from your own unconscious mind, you should get to the bottom of the contradiction. And if you have been wavering in your commit ment to your oaths, you'd better be intensely honest with yourself about why that's happening.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Diamonds are symbols of elegant beauty, which is why they're often used in lewelry. But 80 percent of the world's diamonds have a more utilitarian function. Because they're so hard and have such high thermal conductivity, they are used extensively as cutting, grinding, and polishing tools, and have several other industrial applications. Now let's apply this 20/80 proportion to you. Taurus. Of your talents and abilities, no more than 20 percent need be on display. The rest is consumed in the diligent detail work that goes on in the background – the cutting, grinding, and polishing you do to make yourself as valuable as a diamond. In the coming week, this will be a good meditation for you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The pain you will feel in the coming week will be in direct proportion to the love you suppress and withhold. So if you let your love flow as freely as a mountain spring in a rainstorm, you may not have to deal with any pain at all. What's that you say? You claim that being strategic about how you express your affection gives you strength and protection? Maybe that's true on other occasions, but it's not applicable now. "Unconditional" and "uninhibited" are your words of power.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): What actions best embody the virtue of courage? Fighting on the battlefield as a soldier? Speaking out against corruption and injustice? Climbing a treacherous peak or riding a raft through rough river water? Certainly all those qualify. But French architect Fernand Pouillon had another perspective. He said. Courage lies in being oneself, in showing complete independence, in loving what one loves, in discovering the deep roots of one's feelings. That's exactly the nature of the bravery you are best able to draw on right now. Cancerian. So please do draw on it in abundance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): In his book The Four Insights, author Alberto Villoldo tells the following story: "A traveler comes across two stone cutters. He asks the first, 'What are you doing?' and receives the reply, 'Squaring the stone.' He then walks over to the second stonecutter and asks, 'What are you doing?' and receives the reply, 'I am building a cathedral.' In other words, both men are performing the same task, but one of them is aware that he has the choice to be part of a greater dream." By my astrological reckoning, Leo, it's quite important for you to be like that second stonecutter in the months ahead. I suggest you start now to ensure that outcome.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Harpo Marx was part of the famous Marx Brothers comedy team that made 13 movies. He was known as the silent one. While in his character's persona, he never spoke, but only communicated through pantomime and by whistling, blowing a horn, or playing the harp. In real life, he could talk just fine. He traced the origin of his shtick to an early theatrical performance he had done. A review of the show said that he "performed beautiful pantomime which was ruined whenever he spoke." So in other words, Harpo's successful career was shaped in part by the inspiration he drew from a critic. I invite you to make a similar move, Virgo: Capitalize on some negative feedback or odd mirroring you've received LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): What is your relationship with cosmic jokes, Libra? Do you feel offended by the secrets they spill and the ignorance they expose and the slightly embarrassing truths they compel you to acknowledge? Or are you a vivacious lover of life who welcomes the way cosmic jokes expand your mind and help you lose your excessive self-importance and show you possible solutions you haven't previously imagined? I hope you're in the latter category, be cause sometime in the near future, fate has arranged for you to be in the vicinity of a divine comedy routine. I'm not kidding when I tell you that the harder and more frequently you laugh, the more you'll learn.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): In addition to being an accomplished astrophysicist and philosopher, Arthur Eddington (1882-1944) possessed mad math skills. Legend has it that he was one of only three people on the planet who actually comprehended Einstein's Theory of Relativity. That's a small level of appreciation for such an important set of ideas, isn't it? On the other hand, most people I know would be happy if there were as many as three humans in the world who truly understood them. In accordance with the astrological omens, I suggest you make that one of your projects in the next 12 months: to do whatever you can to ensure there are at least three people who have a detailed comprehension of and appreciation for who you really are.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Yesterday the sun was shining at the same time it was raining, and my mind turned to you. Today I $\,$ felt a surge of tenderness for a friend who has been making me angry, and again I thought of you. Tomorrow maybe I will sing sad songs when I'm cheerful, and go for a long walk when I'm feeling profoundly lazy. Those events, too, would remind me of you. Why? Because you've been experimenting with the magic of contradictions lately. You've been mixing and matching with abandon, going up and down at the same time, and exploring the pleasures of changing your mind. I'm even tempted to speculate that you've been increasing your ability to abide with paradox. Keep up the good work. I'm sure it's a bit weird at times, but it'll ultimately make you even smarter than you already are.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be on the alert for valuable mistakes you could capitalize on. Keep scanning the peripheries for evidence that seems out of place; it might be useful. Do you see what I'm driving at, Capricorn? Accidental revelations could spark good ideas. Garbled communication might show you the way to desirable detours. Chance meetings might initiate conversations that will last a long time. Are you catching my drift? Follow any lead that seems witchy or itchy. Be ready to muscle your way in through doors that are suddenly open just a crack.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An article in the Weekly World News reported on tourists who toast marshmallows while sitting on the rims of active volcanoes. As fun as this practice might be, however, it can expose those who do it to molten lava, suffocating ash, and showers of burning rocks. So I wouldn't recommend it to you. Aquarius, But I do encourage you to try some equally boisterous but less hazardous adventures. The coming months will be prime time for you to get highly imaginative in your approach to exploration, amusement, and pushing beyond your previous limits. Why not get started now?

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): According to my reading of the astrological omens, you would be smart to get yourself a new fertility symbol. Not because I think you should encourage or seek out a literal pregnancy. Rather, I'd like to see you cultivate a more aggressively playful relationship with your creativity - energize it on deep unconscious levels so it will spill out into your daily routine and tincture everything you do. If you suspect my proposal has some merit, be on the lookout for a talisman, totem, or toy that fecundates your imagination

HOMEWORK: Upon waking up for the next seven mornings, sing a song that fills you with feisty hope. To report results, go to RealAstrology.com and click on "Email Rob."

Savage Love

WORDS OF PURE WISDOM by Dan Savage

Could you tell my boy to calm the heck down? Can't seem to get him to get the difference between bestiality, necrophilia, and screwin' a bearskin rug. Emphasizing my usual sexual interests – which involve rope bondage, floggin', and an e-stim unit – hasn't worked. Logic isn't helpin' out at all. Maybe you can help?

I'm a gay man and a hunter; he's a gay boy and a vegan. But he likes how I look in my camo, holding a rifle, so it works. Last fall, I went to Idaho and shot a black bear and a 13-point buck. A taxidermist mounted the buck's head, which hangs above my bed, and made the bear into a rug. Most people don't know this, but the head on a bearskin rug is entirely fake except for the fur. The skull, teeth, and tongue are plastic, and the eyes are glass. That bear's hardly a bear, if you catch me.

So we got the rug, and he liked it. Even wanted me to screw him spread-eagle on that rug until he walked in while I was doing it with the bear. I rigged up the mouth with one of those Fleshlight things, pretty much as a joke, but my boy freaked out when he saw the bear giving me a blowjob of sorts. Called me sick and disgusting, and ever since then, he won't let me tie $him\ up\ or\ beat\ him\ or\ anything.\ He\ says\ he's\ afraid\ I\ will\ kill\ him\ and\ then\ screw\ him.\ I\ keep$ telling him it was all just a game, but he won't believe it. What can I do?

Bear Grinned Anyway

What can you do? You mean besides send video of you and your bear in action to prove this isn't the most entertaining fake letter I've received since Michelle Obama invited me to dinner at Sarah Jessica Parker's apartment? What can you do besides that?

You can do this: You can draw a distinction between what was going on in that bear's mouth when your boyfriend walked in and what was going on in your head. When a man beats off – with or without a Fleshlight-enhanced bearskin rug – two things are kindasorta happening simultaneously: what the man is doing with his dick and what the man is imagining he's doing with his dick. Guys who beat off using a clenched fist, for example, generally aren't clenched-fist fetishists; they're just horny and their fists are there and, say, Sarah Jessica Parker isn't. Fists provide necessary friction; imaginations provide sexy scenarios.

So your boyfriend walked in and saw you fucking the face of a dead bear. That's gonna look bad. BGA, even to a boyfriend who isn't vegan. So how do you fix it? By patiently explaining to your vegan boyfriend that while, yes, you were face-fucking a bear when he walked in on you - there's no denying that - you weren't thinking about face-fucking a bear. Tell him you were thinking about him, and the bear's mouth was just a convenient place to wedge your veganboyfriend-substitute, i.e., your Fleshlight. Tell your boyfriend you don't entertain any murderous fantasies, tell him you only long to fuck living things, and tell him that Homo sapiens are the only animals you find attractive.

Tell him all of that, BGA, even if not all of that is entirely true.

I'm a 17-year-old male and I'm currently in a relationship with a girl who was "sexually active" before we got together. Me being a virgin, I think you can understand why I might be nervous when things get heated. I would like to engage in the act with her eventually, but I don't know if she wants a virgin fumbling around in bed with her. And it's not particularly manly to go to someone and basically say, "I'm not going to be good at this for a while." Not exactly a turn-on. I feel she's ahead of me in experience. What would be the best advice you could give me on the subject?

Nerves Entirely Wrecking Boy

If your girlfriend is close to you in age, NEWB, the odds that she's any good at sex are vanishingly slim, her prior sexual activity notwithstanding. Some people have a knack for sex, of course, but almost all teenagers are lousy at sex. Trust me, NEWB: I was a teenager once, a teenager who slept with other teenagers, and I was lousy at sex and so were they.

Now here's my advice: Chill the fuck out. Presumably, your girlfriend likes you, NEWB, and knows you're a virgin. Which means she knows you'll be a little nervous the first time you two have sex – the first time you have sex – and that there's probably going to be some fumbling. But you wanna know a secret? Even sexually experienced adults – even adults who are really good at sex and have had tons of it – still get nervous, NEWB, and there's no such thing as sex without some fumbling.

As for your concerns about seeming less than manly: You're bringin' the dick, NEWB, so you're the man. Your nerves won't render you dickless. If you're worried about displaying a manly confidence, well, you can still do that: Go into your first sexual experience confident that your girlfriend is into you and confident that she wants you, and be honestly and unapolo getically who you are. Being yourself is far more manly than pretending to be someone or something you're not, NEWB, and there's nothing less manly than pussing out on a new experience for fear of appearing unmanly. Honest nerves are manlier than false bravado.

One last thing to do before you lose your virginity: Watch a weekend marathon of 16 and Pregnant on MTV. That show will inspire you to use condoms religiously and correctly, NEWB, every single time. Even if your girlfriend is or claims to be using hormonal birth control, wrap your manly ol' dick up before you slide it inside.

Following up on the letter about masturbating in the privacy of a public toilet stall: Guys are being banned from Multnomah County libraries in Portland, Oregon, for wanking in the supposed privacy of locked bathroom stalls. Facilities security officers peep through spaces between stall doors and write up reports that go into detail about "shiny liquids" spotted on offenders' hands, and those who are caught are excluded from the libraries for a year. I thought sexual activity" required a partner and masturbation wasn't a crime if practiced in private but tell that to the peeping uniformed officers working in the Central Library, aka "Portland's Crown Jewel." You can't go to a locked bathroom stall and rub one out, on pain of landing on the Excluded Patrons List as a masturbator. Victorian prudery lives.

Wanking In Private Environs

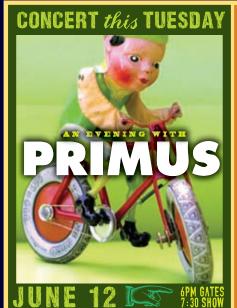

The letter writer who got caught wanking in a public toilet had taken pains to find an empty men's restroom on a deserted floor of an office building. He wanted to have his midday wank, WIPE, without disturbing or unnerving others. I don't think the same could be said for the men who are rubbing 'em out in the toilets of Portland's Central Library.

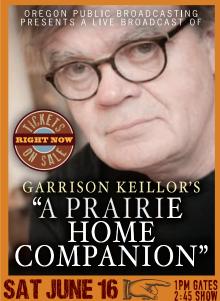

Look, I'm familiar with Portland's Central Library, WIPE; I wrote huge chunks of two of my books there. The toilets are crowded, and there's no way you can beat off in one without disturbing others. I don't have a problem with people rubbing 'em out - hello - but guys who get off in public toilets because they get off on public toilets are forcing other people to serve as props in their masturbatory fantasies. And that ain't cool.
